How to read this record

Each message shows its time, who sent it, and its number (M0001 is the first message in the export).

Anyone can check that this record and its companion documents belong together and have not been changed, free, at vaultxt.com/check. Nothing is uploaded. This says nothing about who made the pack or whether a court will accept it.

Words in plain type are copied exactly from the chat. Words in italics are ours: they say what a line is, for example a voice note or a notice WhatsApp wrote itself.

Spelling, emoji and punctuation are left as they were sent.

A voice note written out by speech-to-text software is shown in a shaded box marked "Machine transcription". The software can mishear words, so the voice note itself is the record.

A message marked as edited shows only its final wording. WhatsApp does not export earlier versions.

VaultXT is not a law firm and this is not legal advice. Check your court's own rules before you use it.

If this record mentions children, share it only with the court, your solicitor or others who need it, and follow the court's rules on protecting children's information.
